

How many times a day should I feed my chickens?

Chicken is a very common poultry. The improvement of the mass economy and the rapid growth of the world population have caused the demand for chickens to continue to increase. Chicken and eggs have become indispensable ingredients in our daily lives. The rapid growth of the market has made more and more people started to raise chickens. In rural households, basically every household raises a few chickens, so that the daily egg supply is sufficient. And large-scale poultry breeding has become very common.

Compared with cattle, sheep and other animals, chicken breeding is not simple. And a little carelessness will cause chicken problems and cause economic losses. In the process of raising chickens, you need to have better breeding techniques. And you must always pay attention to the diet of the chickens, because the diet of the chickens determines the quality of the chickens to a large extent. So when you raise the chickens, you usually feed them several times a day. What?

Different types of chickens and different feeding methods will have different feeding times per day. The specific feeding times still need to be carried out according to the actual situation of breeding.

For free-range chickens, it is sufficient to feed them once a day in the morning and evening. If it is a free-range chicken that lays eggs, a bucket should be placed in the corridor or nest to allow the chickens to feed freely at any time. The chickens in the chicken farm need to be fed food three times a day. Or continuously feed for 24 hours, so that the broilers can be released in about 50 days.

For family raising chickens, it is recommended to feed 2-3 times a day. There is no specific time, as long as the feeding time is the same every day. The laying hens should be fed 3 times a day, at 7 am, 12 noon and afternoon. Around 5 o'clock.

Scientifically feeding chickens should adjust various nutrients in chicken feed according to the chicken's production environment and egg production. Practice has proved that adjusting chicken feed is one of the simplest . And most effective ways to increase the economic profit of the breeding industry.
